

Trinity Eco Church

Fancy a new game for this Christmas?

Daybreak

Daybreak is a co-operative board game in which the players seek to work together to put a stop to climate change and build resilient communities. It has a relatively high level of complexity in line with a lot of modern board games, so it is helpful to have a board gamer as part of the group, or it will be a steep learning curve for all involved!

Daybreak doesn't pull any punches, and it is a difficult game to win – this is good in showing the complexity and difficulty of tackling climate change, but it can make for a demoralizing experience for those who might be suffering from eco anxiety.

The real strength of Daybreak is showing the interconnected nature of many of the environmental and ecological issues we face, as well as showing the different tools we have available to us in combatting the causes and effects.

This could be a great resource for starting conversations about climate change with people who love board games but may prove frustrating for those not already interested in gaming
